Canadians Still Oppose Afghan Mission Extension; Reject Talks with Taliban

Three-in-five (62%) believe the Harper government has failed to effectively explain why Canadian soldiers are in Afghanistan.

[VANCOUVER - Apr. 12, 2008] - The views of Canadians on the mission in Afghanistan, and on the way their government has informed the public about the endeavour, have gone through little variation over the past three months, a new Angus Reid Strategies poll has found.

In the online survey of a national representative sample, a majority of respondents (54%) disagree with the decision to extend Canada's mission in Afghanistan for another three years, down four points since March. Quebecers (67%) and women (61%) provide the highest rejection rate for the authorization by the House of Commons. Alberta is the only region where a majority of respondents (55%) endorses the extension.

As has been the case since December 2007, three-in-five Canadians (62%) believe the Harper government has not effectively explained the mission in Afghanistan. Female respondents are once again particularly critical, with just one-in-four (24%) providing a positive assessment of the way the federal administration has informed the public.

More than half of respondents (54%) regard the Canadian effort in Afghanistan as war, including 59 per cent of male respondents, and 60 per cent of Atlantic Canadians. Three-in-four respondents (75%) believe Canadian troops are shouldering too much of the burden of the mission led by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), and three-in-five (60%) state that the Afghan people are clearly benefiting from Canadian efforts in their country.

KEY FINDINGS

- » 54% of Canadians disagree with extending the mission until 2011
- » 54% see the mission in Afghanistan as war, not peace effort
- » 48% disagree with the Canadian government actively negotiating with the Taliban
- » 75% think Canada continues to shoulder too much of the burden of NATO's mission
- » 62% say the Harper government has not effectively explained the mission in Afghanistan
- » 60% believe Afghans benefit from Canadian presence in their country

Full topline results are at the end of this release.

From May 7 to May 8, 2008, Angus Reid Strategies conducted an online survey among a randomly selected, representative sample of 1,006 adult Canadians. The margin of error for the total sample is +/- 3.1 %, 19 times out of 20. The results have been statistically weighted according to the most current education, age, gender and region Census data to ensure a sample representative of the entire adult population of Canada. Discrepancies in or between totals are due to rounding.

The survey asked Canadians for the first time if Canada should reach out to the Taliban if this helps the peace efforts led by the elected Afghan government. Almost half of respondents (48%) disagree with the Canadian government actively negotiating with the Taliban, including one-in-three (34%) who strongly disagree. While 60 per cent of Albertans believe talking to the Taliban is out of the question, 46 per cent of Atlantic Canadians and 40 per cent of Quebecers would agree to the idea.

Mission in Afghanistan

As you may know, the House of Commons has authorized an extension of Canada's mission in Afghanistan until the end of 2011, which is conditional on Canada coming up with unmanned aerial vehicles and transport helicopters, and NATO providing an additional 1,000 troops in the south. Do you agree or disagree with the decision to extend Canada's mission in Afghanistan until the end of 2011?
